SOURCE:

1. A repatriated North Korean in T'aet'an (N 38-04, E 125-18) (YC 0215), who claimed to have been at the Kojedo prisoner of war camp, said that the South Korean camps were terrible, the food bad, and the clothing poor. He also said that once, because of the poor treatment, the prisoners went on strike and were bombed by American planes in retaliation.
2. In October the people in Hwanghae Province were being told of North Korea's victory, but were warned that the Americans were training 30,000 South Korean agents to infiltrate into North Korea to gain military and political information. They were also being told that the United States would again launch an attack on North Korea.
